Torment of mind!--he is not to he vanquished; This laughing deity; this tyrant Cupid, .-r Thaf rages in my foul!--oh thou fond boy, More than the strength of Hercules is wanting To tear thy silken strings, that hold my heart. From Mirima s eyes thy shafts are sent; From thence they come, with never-erring aim, And pierce e en all they touch--now I behold her, .: ; ; Th enchanting, lovely maid jshe sever present: Darkness and Night can never shroud her froiyi me; Imagination can create a day Amidst the thickest gloom. In sleep she mixes, And forms my dreams; then, -starting, I awake, And, for my love, grasp a deludrive shadow. I cannot rest; in vain the god of steep li still in vok d: like death, to men in mis ry, The more he s courted, he the farther flies. My nephew...
